

Mail in ballots are inherently conducive to fraud. In the 2016 presidential election in CT, when I went to vote I noticed my daughter's name (who had moved to CO and was voting there) was on the registered voter list still under my address. I informed the local election worker of this and she was promptly removed. Under the circumstances of mail in ballots in the 2020 election, her ballot would have arrived at my home and I could easily have completed it and returned it. This is just one example of how this could invite fraud.

I also waited in line for hours to vote in 2020 despite being in the height of COVID without any vaccines. There is not a person in CT who is unable to get an absentee ballot if necessary, which leads me to believe the purpose of this is to enable illegitimate votes to be counted to alter an outcome.
